On climate change, Sanders acknowledged that U.S. companies shipping coal abroad poses no less threat to the planet than a plant on American soil. He suggested the federal government could find a way to curtail such schemes. That position should catch the attention of Oakland, where local residents are trying to stop a port facility to be bankrolled with the help of Utah coal interests. We would like to hear Clinton’s view on that, and myriad other issues that Sanders took on with passion and clarity.
